"I So far in my life, studying abroad has been my greatest accomplishment not because I cultivated these qualities in myself, but because I learned them alongside my fellow Saints and new friends who joined me on the journey. My study abroad experience was fairly typical. I attended classes, frequented the local cafes, went on a few trips and took more pictures than I know what to do with. At first, I was anxious that I wasn't living up to the expectation that I would be constantly going out with friends and traveling extensively across Europe. Not that there is anything wrong with that pattern, but mixed with the culture shock, the first few weeks were a bit restless! I want to impress upon any potential study abroad student that whether they spend every weekend exploring a new city or get to know Angers like the back of their hand, they are taking full advantage of the experience. Studying abroad is meant to build upon each student's unique skills and interests. There is no right or wrong way to embrace such an adventure".
